d2w® technology turns ordinary plastic at the end of its useful life, in the presence of oxygen, into a material with a different molecular structure. At the end of the process, it is no longer a plastic, and has changed into a material which is biodegradable (by bacteria and fungi) in the open environment.

ISSA, the worldwide cleaning industry association, has launched the Cleaning Industry Training Standard (CITS), a training certification program for frontline professionals and organizations in the cleaning industry.

Developed as a sister program to ISSA's Cleaning Industry Management Standard (CIMS), CITS has been designed specifically to help address the need for training, improved professionalism, and increased pride across all segments of the cleaning industry.

"The CITS program furthers ISSA's initiative to change the way the world views cleaning," said Dan Wagner, ISSA facility services director. "With the CIMS and CITS programs in place, we can now take a more holistic approach to addressing the needs of the cleaning industry. Where CIMS focuses on the management of an entire organization, CITS focuses specifically on the training of frontline cleaning professionals."
